ROOF DAMAGE ALERT

HAIL/WIND DAMAGE EXPERTS

You may have hail damage and NOT know it!

Granule Loss

Granules are the sandpaper-like part of the shingle. When a shingle loses granules, its asphalt coating is exposed to the elements, and this leads to accelerated aging.

Cracks in the Shingles

Hard hail impacts or high winds can rip the shingles and cause cracks. This can lead to exposure and tears, leaving your roof with bare spots. Cracked shingles cannot effectively protect your roof from the weather.

Exposed Fiberglass Mat

Hail impact on a roof can shatter the shingles' surfacing, causing it to break away from the fiberglass mat underneath.

Fractured Fiberglass Mat

Fractured fiberglass can be slightly harder to detect and usually requires a trained eye. Fractured fiberglass mats can result in tears and cracks from a point of hail impact.

What if I ignore this damage?

If hail damage has caused granule loss on your roof shingles, it will affect the performance of the shingle. Granules on asphalt shingles help to protect the asphalt from UV light degradation caused by the sun. While you may not have a roof leak right away, shingles that have lost granules have a higher risk of failing prematurely.

When ignored, shingle and roof damage can quickly turn into leaks. These eventually turn into mold damage, electrical issues, or rotting wood — all of which are expensive to fix. Being proactive about potential issues like these can save you thousands of dollars and keep your home in great condition.
